

Happy Tuesday! Welcome back to Leadership Unscripted.

As you read this, I'm on a trip to Ghana—a journey I've been looking forward to for a long time. Travel always reminds me of something important: the best leaders approach life a lot like travelers.

Traveling Through Leadership

Leadership, like travel, requires flexibility, patience, and openness.

Here are three quick leadership lessons travel teaches us:

1. Flexibility is key.

Flights change, luggage gets delayed, plans shift. And I definitely had this on this trip! Leaders, too, must adapt quickly when things don't go as planned.

2. Patience creates peace.

Travel delays are frustrating, but patience keeps you grounded. The same is true in leadership—patience allows space for growth, learning, and better decision-making.

3. Openness expands perspective.

Travel exposes us to new cultures and ways of thinking. Leaders who remain open to diverse perspectives always lead stronger, more innovative teams.

Action Step for the Week:

Approach your leadership like a traveler. Where can you be more flexible, patient, or open this week?

What I'm Up To:

I am enjoying my trip to Ghana, which I know will be filled with lessons and reflections that I can't wait to share with you when I return.

Book Update: I'm in the final editing phase of my book which is about living and leading authentically, and now comes the fun part—I need your help naming it. 🎉

I shared a post on LinkedIn, Instagram, and Facebook last week asking for ideas. I'd love for you to check it out and add your thoughts—or simply hit reply to this email and share your suggestion directly with me.

Your input means so much, and I can't wait to see what you come up with!

Final Thought:

Leadership, like travel, is a journey—not a destination. Embrace the detours, practice patience, and stay open to what you can learn along the way.
